Job Posting – Course Instructor Position
Summer Term 2024

Posted on March 13, 2024.

The Department of History is seeking 1 Course Instructor for the following course:

HIS495H1-F, L5101 Topics in History: An Empire of Travel: British World Tourism in the Long Nineteenth Century

This course explores the relationship between British imperialism and the rise of modern tourism in the nineteenth century. Particular attention is given to the industry's expansion from Britain to the European continent and beyond, as well the role of royal tours in advancing imperialist objectives and the various impacts of tourist demand for international exhibitions and big-game hunting excursions. Drawing on contemporary scholarship and social theory, this course also considers the formation of imperial identities during a period of unprecedented mobility for the working and middle classes. Course themes include Romanticism, political hegemony, the spectacle, nationalism, racial formation, and gender.
